

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

My supervisor, Dr. G.N. Roy has allowed me to prosper under his individualistic principles of supervision which mete out a liberty and discipline that are necessary to the development of a researcher's critical ability. More than the formality of his strident scholarship, it was the informality of my relationship with him that contributed to my critical perspective. It is he, who with a near neoclassical directness, inspired me to explore the critical undulation of the postmodern-poststructural pastures of critical theory.

I owe Dr. Ashish Sengupta, Department of English, University of North Bengal, an amusing debt that started with his question in my seminar address: "Where is the poet in the postmodern poststructural theory?" This question has triggered my life long quest to figure out the zone of uneasy calm amidst the maelstrom of theories and counter theories. More than the question he has always been a ready answer to my moments that have been bruised by a feeling little less than inimicality and experiences that have been cankered with immaturity. In this connection, I thank all the other members of the Department of English, University of North Bengal, for their cooperation.

To say that I owe an immense gratitude to Dr. P. K. Roy, Department of Philosophy, University of North Bengal, would certainly demonstrate the impoverishment of the metaphor. It is he who has institutionalised my interest in classics and coaxed an efflorescence of strong interest in philosophy, both Eastern and Western, that culminated in Rabindranath Tagore and Sri Aurobindo. It is he who has watered my Tree, manured it with the eclectic grains of thought and infused the spirit that sustains and adds without manifesting any inclination to share the fruit.

My heart reaches out to Prof. Niranjana Mohanty, Department of English and Modern European Languages, Visva Bharati, who taught me the ethics of true scholarship which is a much coveted and yet often elusive combination of affection and erudition. His suggestions have been incisive, observations have been analytic to say the least, and friendship has been engraved in faith and 'becalming' smile.

Dr. George Patteri and Dr. Sabujkali Mitra of the Department of Philosophy, Visva Bharati, deserve my heartfelt thanks for their assistance. Dr. Patteri, whom I fondly call Georgeda, is instrumental in supplying me with a substantial amount of resources for my work on Old Testament poetry. Several discussions with him and many others with whom he introduced me for critical parleys helped me to navigate through the deceptively simple waters of Old Testament poetry. Here I tender my heartfelt thanks to Prof. R.K. Dasgupta for writing an erudite letter, as he is so wont in accomplishing, to me which provided an immensely helpful bibliography.

I am immensely grateful to the members of the Central Library, Visva Bharati, for their support and assistance. I thank the members of British Council Library, Calcutta, National Library, Calcutta, USIS, Calcutta and the staff of the Central Library, University of North Bengal. Here I would be failing in my duty if I do not mention my perennial gratitude to Tanaya Gupta and Tapan Gupta, (Library, University of North Bengal) for all the things that they have done for me. I cherish the 'debt' with pleasant enthusiasm.

Also, I express my sincere gratitude to Prof. Dilip Sinha, Vice Chancellor, Visva Bharati, Santiniketan, for his kind words of encouragement. A brilliant intellectual himself, he has always been a source of inspiration to budding scholars. I can never forget the affection and moral support that Prof. Sudhendu Mondol, Visva Bharati, has given me right from the inception of my project.

Finally, I choose to remain silent about my parents and Sumana for I owe them all that silence can speak.
