

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This project which began eight years back and has undergone many mutations and digressions, would not have reached completion without the generous support of many individuals and institutions. In these long years, I have shared my views with many scholars. My debts, therefore, are to many people and I wish to take this opportunity to thank them all.

First, I would like to thank my supervisor and mentor Professor Ananda Gopal Ghosh for his encouraging comments, meticulous reading, sharing his vast knowledge of regional history, teaching me the skills to become a good researcher and most importantly, keeping me on track. In fact, I broached the idea of writing a monograph on Malda when I started teaching in Malda College. The idea, however, would never have been materialised without the guidance and suggestions of Professor Ghosh. He introduced me to the intricate world of regional history and enabled me to articulate my thought in a more systematic manner.

I owe an intellectual debt to individuals in multiple locations and from different points of research. In Malda, my teachers at Malda College, especially Dr. Siddhartha Guha Roy shaped my intellectual trajectory. At University of North Bengal, my professors taught me to think beyond historical "facts and figures" for which I am most grateful. I have also a debt of gratitude to Kiran Sankar Majumdar, the editor of Gourdoot, who passed away before the completion of this study.

The assistance and interest of the librarians and staff at the National Library in Calcutta, Malda District Library, Kaligram Library, Malda Zilla Parishad Library, West Bengal State Archives, West Bengal Police Archives, SB Branch, Malda Collectrorate Record Office, are most appreciated. They gave me ready access to the materials upon which the present study is based.

A special word of thanks to Mr. Amit Chakraborty for his invaluable assistance in the production of this thesis. Some debts, sadly, can no longer be acknowledged in person. My father and mother, would have been proud and delighted to see this thesis completed. My debts to my wife Mitali are too numerous to be listed. It was she who motivated a lethargic researcher into action. The thesis would not have completed without her unflagging support, understanding and encouragement over the years. My little daughter Tinni has been a constant source of pleasant and refreshing distraction that helped me to bear with the tedium of research.

I would like to dedicate this thesis to my parents, Asis Sarkar and Gayetri Sarkar, who passed away before I could complete this work.
