

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It took four years of fieldwork and another six years of strenuous exercise of writing and rewriting the report amidst hopes and despairs having taken their own time to finally produce this report in this present form. My guide has always been with me from a distant to inspire and encourage me throughout when ever I drifted to despairs. I always missed a constant companionship of my guide although I had opportunities to have intense interactions with him in quite a few occasions during the work. The present report therefore, would be lacking in the minute nicety and technicalities of a standard ethnographic thesis of this nature. However, for the ethnographic value of the rarely available information about some people in Bhutan I am happy to present this report.

In making this report presentable to the academic society I have many debts to acknowledge. Firstly, I am greatly indebted to Prof. B.P Misra, Centre for Himalayan Studies in the North Bengal University without whose bold initiatives, guidance and encouragement this work would not have seen the light in the academic circle in the present form. There were times, when I had almost given up hope of completing this work while at my work place but for a timely telephone call from a distant corner of North Bengal and a word of encouragement used to woke me up to again pull up myself and do whatever I could manage to despite many a distracting factors with me. The occasional personal interactions with him have been great learning and self-rediscovering experiences for me in not only the academic concerns but also in my own personal life and career. I revere him as a role model of academicians and a true guide and philosopher.

Secondly, I am also greatly benefited from the very candid and valuable observations and feedback received from Prof. R.S. Mukhopadhyay of the Department of Sociology and Social Anthropology of the University in enriching academic value of this work. I am very grateful to him for sparing his busy time and showing interests in my work. I am grateful to the University of North Bengal to have permitted me to register as a private research scholar for the work and also for having granted me enough time to gather myself to put things into final shape. I am thankful to Mr. J.M. Majumdar and Dr. D Boot of Documentation Centre for all the supports in accessing reference materials and computer services at the Centre for Himalayan Studies.

Thirdly, I am also much indebted to the people about whom present the work is all. I was fortunate to have been allowed to live with them to see their ways of life from close quarters. Among whom there were many students, friends and elders who loved, cared and owned me as one of them. I thank all of them including all the deities of the Doyas for keeping me healthy and happy, and making my stay among them unforgettable experiences. And through them I beseech for forgiveness for any unintentional trespasses into the sacred realms or privacy of the people and/or any blunders I might have done in my ignorance during the course of my inquiries to produce this document.

Fourthly, I am thankful to the Education Department of the Royal Government Bhutan for providing me the rare opportunity to work in a remote area among the people. I am also grateful to District Commissioners and District Education Officers who encouraged and provided necessary supports while working in the remote schools. I am also thankful to Mr. Jagar Dorji, the then Education Director, Royal Government of Bhutan who recognized my humble documentation on the Doyas. Through his good office I was able to get a rare opportunity of officially conducting a short survey work of different communities besides the Doyas in the area before leaving Bhutan. I am also grateful to Mr. George van Driem, Associate Professor of the Linguistics Department of the University of Amsterdam who came down to the Doyas on an official linguistics survey conducted by the Royal Government of Bhutan during my stay among the Doyas. From him I gained valuable knowledge on the Doya language. He also provided me some photographs of the Doyas taken during his survey.

The efforts of putting my work into prints right from the first draft to the final stage have been from my cousin Ms. Subhra and her colleagues of Association for Food Scientist, Imphal, my nephew Biswajit, proprietor, Kaku Computers and his friends. I am grateful to all of them for bringing out this thesis in the present form. I am thankful to Mr. Phalguni and Gagan of Computer Pride for giving me the needful technical supports in printing and of scanning all the photographs, sketches and maps.

Lastly, I must also acknowledge the financial and opportunity support provided to me from VVD-FGC, Imphal in completing the work. I must thank Capt. (Retd.) Ashok Y. Tipnis, Chairman VVD, for doing the much needed language corrections and suggestions at the last stage. I was able to make considerable improvement on the grammar, structure and presentation style of this work. Mr. J.K. Shimrei of VVD-FGC for their encouragement and support in completing this work. I am grateful to all other persons who helped me directly or indirectly in doing this work. Last but not the least, I thank my wife who merrily shouldered full responsibility of looking after my family with aged parents during the work.
