

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In preparing this dissertation, I have benefitted from the help and assistance from numerous sources. At the outset, I must express my deep sense of gratitude to my Supervisor Dr. P.K.Sengupta, Professor and Head, Department of Political Science, University of North Bengal, for his patient, methodical and scholarly guidance in shaping my research imagination and seeing it through its conclusion and logical end. It was his keen interest in my work and sustained pressure, combined with affection that gave me the rare incentive and momentum to carry on and complete this work. The present dissertation thus owes much to this ideal teacher, critical researcher and creative mentor in the way of its successful completion.

I feel equally privileged to recall the genuine inspiration and encouragement that I received from Mrs. Sengupta. Her affectionate but friendly interaction has always been a source of inspiration to me.

I would like to acknowledge the inspiration and encouragement that I received from the teachers of the Department of Political Science, University of North Bengal.

My indebtedness is due to the University Grants Commission for sanctioning a teacher fellowship for one year under the Faculty Improvement Programme without which the dissertation could not have been completed. I extend my thanks to the staff of the Library of the University of North Bengal and the National Library, Calcutta for making available the needed materials with promptness and care.

I would fail in my duty if I do not acknowledge indebtedness to my college authority, Vivekananda College, Alipurduar for its liberal approach in sanctioning one years leave to complete my research and then again, eight weeks leave for the finalization of my dissertation. I would like to put on record my gratitude specially to Dr. G.S.Roy, Principal of my college who was all along instrumental in seeing that I get leaves for the completion of my research. I feel it my duty to acknowledge my indebtedness to Mr. S. Majumdar, Head clerk of my college who extended both formal and informal assistance to me in regard to the technicalities of my leaves and other things which allowed me to be least bothered about the college and concentrate fully on research.

Thanks are also due to Ashis for his patient sitting in front of the Computer Monitor for hours together for the neat completion of the present thesis. Similarly, I would like to extend thanks to Mithu for taking the trouble to photocopy the entire thesis within a very short time and give the same to me in bound form as it looks now.

I would also like to put on record my indebtedness to my parents who were constant source of inspiration for me, especially my father, who was keen to see my research completed in time but worried when I was failing to do so for one reason or the other.

I do not want to let down the contributions of my husband, Dr. M. Yasin, Reader in Political Science, University of North Bengal by formally extending thanks and acknowledging gratitude to him. I feel proud of admitting that he had always been with me with his critical and contributory suggestions during the entire period of the completion of my research. Finally, no word will be enough to acknowledge the contribution of my two years old son, Neel, whose knotty behaviour often caused irritations for me while doing the research work but those irritations were the fundamental source of my energy, inspiration and concentration. This dissertation is thus as much of mine as of Neel. The limitations, if any, are exclusively mine.
