

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I take great pleasure in placing on record my profound gratitude and appreciation towards the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh, who generously provided me the necessary scholarship to pursue Ph.D degree and work on deputation in India. Without this help the research work would not have been completed. I am also indebted to the North Bengal University, Darjeeling, West Bengal, India, for allowing me to pursue this programme and providing necessary assistance towards the completion of my work.

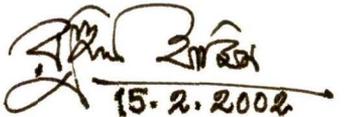

This work has been completed under the supervision of Shri Jeta Sankrityayana, Reader in Economics, North Bengal University, India. I find it difficult to adequately express my deepest sense of gratitude to him as it would have been almost impossible for me to complete this research work without his invaluable guidance and constant help. I also take this opportunity to express my heartfelt gratitude to Ms. Sanchari Mukherjee, Reader in Economics, North Bengal University, for her valuable guidance and proper suggestions. In addition, I am also grateful to the other teachers and staff of the Department of Economics, North Bengal University for their help and cooperation.

I gratefully acknowledge the help and cooperation extended to me by my colleagues and other officials of the Government of Bangladesh, who provided me all possible assistance in collecting data and information pertaining to my research work. I have also received valuable assistance and cooperation of a number of personnel at various libraries and institutions and I extend my personal thanks to each of them. I gratefully remember the bank officials and teachers of Daudkandi upazila in Comilla district for their cooperation when I was there to conduct the field survey to collect primary data and information for my research work.

I am indebted to all of my friends and well-wishers who have helped and encouraged me throughout the duration of my work. Specially, I extend my profound gratitude to Dr. Haripada Bhattacharjee, Professor, Dhaka University, for his constant encouragement and help from the very beginning of the research work. Moreover, I am also thankful to other teachers of the Dhaka University for their help and cooperation.

I feel obliged to the fellow research scholars working in this University, specially to the Bangladeshi scholars, whose companionship, cooperation and assistance have provided the necessary support to see me through the period of my stay in the University campus.

Finally, I am indebted to my mother and my relatives who constantly encouraged me to complete this research work. Last but not the least, I take this opportunity to place on record my heartfelt gratitude towards my wife, Gausia Roksana Akter and my two sons, Mashiat Sarker Shakkhar and Mashfic Sarker Pratik, without whose sincere support, untiring help and constant inspiration this work would not have seen the light of the day.

15. 2. 2002

(Md. Ruhul Amin Sarker)

Senior Assistant Secretary

Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh