

Acknowledgements

If the present thesis deserves a single reading by any reader, the merit should be accorded to a host of people who made it possible to happen (sometimes appearing almost impossible) – myself being only a part of the process. I acknowledge my inexpressible gratitude to my parents who took it upon themselves to challenge the very construct of my “visually challenged” status. As regards supervision of my work, I profusely thank Dr. Ashis Sengupta, Professor of English, University of North Bengal: it was he who held the helm fast through a sea of trouble (sometimes created even by myself) to make this improbable happen with the patience, tolerance, meticulous supervision and accommodation which hardly (if at all) any scholar enjoys from his/her supervisor. I must express my thankfulness to all my readers (Prasenjit, Santosh, Amrita, Sayantani, Pratyus, Nilangshu, Somtirtha and others whom I couldn’t mention owing not to dearth of feelings but of space) who remained chief accessories in my journey to overcome structural barriers. I also am grateful to the North Bengal University for extending the tenure of my registration and A. C. College, Jalpaiguri, for granting me the much-needed study leave to enable me to bring the project home. I extend my heartfelt thanks to my younger brother (for both technical and mental support), my friends, my colleagues (extending mental, administrative and academic support), seniors (Sumanadi and others), teachers and other family members whom I couldn’t mention due to scarcity of space. Of course, the list would be incomplete if I did not mention my laptop and the screen reading software JAWS which almost became prosthesis during these days for me. I can only acknowledge – since friendship precludes “thanks” and “sorry’s” – the never-failing companionship of Kaustav throughout the journey. Finally, I must acknowledge the constant inspiration, partnership and assurance of being by my side, extended by my husband. I conclude my acknowledgements by expressing my unreciprocable debt to all the books I have come across so far and my inarticulable gratitude to my parents and sir once again.
