

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The completion of the present study made me obliged to number of persons, without whose liberal and generous assistance, the work would not have been complete. At the onset, I must acknowledge my gratitude and appreciation to my supervisor Professor Manas Chakrabarty without whose active and constructive guidance it would not have been possible to bring forth my Ph.D thesis. I want to acknowledge his constant and encouraging endeavour aimed towards a better completion of this thesis. He has been a source of constant support and guidance which has resulted in this study of mine. I want to pay my sincere gratitude to Professor Manas Chakrabarty for all the pains that he has taken despite his hard schedule towards formulation of my thesis paper.

I would also sincerely like to thank the various tribal women respondent who took the time and energy to respond to my numerous queries. So many ancillary persons who contributed in providing me with various statistical datas (vis-à-vis the datas contributing to numerous statistic) deserve a special mention. My prolong stay in the tea gardens of Dooars and interactions with grass root tribal women population in Terai makes me indebted to numerous personalities, without whose personal contributions, this study would not have been possible.

I would also like to acknowledge UGC for standing by me and encouraging me to carry forward with this research project.

The staff in the library of Centre for Women Studies, NBU, deserves a special acknowledgement for bearing with me and keeping the doors of their library open for me always. I would also like to pay my acknowledgment to the members of the printing press who have made an earnest endeavor to get this study of mine ready within the stipulated period of time.

Special mention has to be made of the still serving Labour Welfare Officer (LWO) of Chalsa Tea Garden, Mr. Rahul Sharma, who always took a special effort to arrange meetings with the tribal tea garden workers.

I remain extremely indebted to Rina Ekka, Ex-member of Ghoshpukur Gram Panchayat, for her whole hearted support during the course of my studies in Terai region. Without her valuable support, it would not have been possible for me to actively interview so many of the tribal women representatives of the area.

The head of my present institution under which I am employed, deserves a special mention for giving me the professional space towards completion of this project.

I further express my whole hearted gratitude to my brother-in-law Mr. Joydeep Dutta who despite residing in Singapore has supported me by giving computer related inputs. Without the extensive and meaningful support of my husband, Dr. Shubhdeep Dutta, it would not have been possible for me to successfully complete this study of mine.

A Special thanks is also due to my mother and my parent-in-laws who have constantly encourage me during every step of this study. Without their wholesome encouragement it would not have been possible for me to complete this study.

And how can I forget the mention of my little son Srinjoy, who despite his small age has smilingly sacrificed the company of his mother; the driving force for him being the fact that his mother is doing Ph.D. Numerous evenings which he has had to spend in solitude, deprived of his mother's company, bear testimony to his unhinged support for my cause.
