The research underlying this dissertation was carried out under the able and encouraging supervision of Professor M. Yasin, Department of Political Science, University of North Bengal. I would not have been in a position to put my ideas in the order they have taken without his academic guidance and encouragement. I express my deep sense of gratitude to him.

The teacher fellowship awarded by UGC for two years (April 1, 2004 to March 31, 2006) under Faculty Improvement Programme during 10th plan period, enabled me to concentrate on and organize the main research for this dissertation without sharing the responsibility of class teaching and other duties as a college teacher. The Governing Body of Mathabhanga College has been kind enough to sanction the required leave for enjoying the teacher fellowship. I record my sense of indebtedness to UGC and Mathabhanga College.

The literature used for the research was consulted in the library of the University of North Bengal, the library of the Centre for Studies in Social Sciences, Kolkata, the British Council Library, Kolkata, the library of IDS Kolkata, and the library of Mathabhanga College. I happily appreciate the sincere cooperation of the librarian and staff of these libraries.

One of the most rewarding aspects of working on this dissertation is that it has brought me in contact with the works of extraordinarily capable and great scholars in the field of 'development studies'. They have inspired the logic of the dissertation. I again find it rewarding to acknowledge this inspiration.

Some of my friends and well wishers sincerely urged me to finish the dissertation at the earliest. Sri Shakti Mandal of Saityen Maitra Janshiksha Samity, Kolkata, Dr. Md. Helal Uddin of Sitananda College, Nandigram and Dr. Smt. Srinanda Dasgupta of K.G.T. Mahavidyalay deserve special mention in this regard. I extend my best appreciation to them. Sri Chaitanya Poddar, Headmaster, Mathabhanga High School, has been generous enough in allowing me to share the PC of his office for last eight months. I appreciate his generosity.

Ranendra Narayan Bhowmik (Raju) has been sincere and careful enough in typing the dissertation. He has happily shared the burden of this work in spite of his other engagements. I extend my appreciation to him.

My parents have remained a constant source of inspiration in every aspect of my life as with this dissertation. Tean and Rifaat suffered the loss of my companionship as father for a long period of three years. They always inspired, however, by asking me the progress of the work. The dissertation would not have survived its gestation without the constant support of my wife Sahidina Banu (Lipi).
