

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

It is impossible to acknowledge all one's debt in a thesis of this kind. Working in an academic climate one assimilates ideas often without being aware of their source, sometimes a simple remark or comment from my teachers or research mates - or a sentence from a book illuminates the problems preoccupying one's mind. It is true that no work is the product of one man and this thesis is no exception.

However, I am conscious of my debt to Professor, B. Bhattacharya of the University of North Bengal under whose guidance I had the rare privilege^{of} working. His invariably scholarly, friendly and helpful assistance were invaluable to me. He was very kind to go through the scripts, make corrections at several places and write a foreward to it. I am enormously indebted to him and do not find adequate words to express my heart-felt gratitude.

This occasion makes me remember with deep sense of gratitude and satisfaction the advice, suggestions and unfathomable affection from my teachers of school, college and university level, without whom I could not be what I am today.

I owe also a debt of gratitude to my research mates for their help and inspiration from time to time during the period.

My thanks and compliments are also due to my family members whose love, sympathy, urge and encouragement were extended to me ungrudgingly to make this assignment a success.

I wish to thank Dr. P.K. Chanda, my husband for sharing and enlivening the difficult task of completing this thesis. His dedication and sincere attempt for creating a congenial atmosphere to enable me to work healthily and satisfactorily is always remarkable.

My thanks and regards are also due to the various agencies like the Survey of India, the Settlement Survey, the Municipalities, the Public Works Departments, the North Bengal State Transport Corporation, Banks etc. What have contributed to my thinking I have tried to put into this thesis.

Then Prof. S.Pal of Govt. Training College, Hooghly deserves also respect and thanks from my end for his sincere help by permitting me to use his well-organised laboratory under all circumstances as required.

All of the above must be, I am bound to express, given a share of whatever credit this thesis will earn but responsibility for any criticism it will attract will entirely be lying with me.

Finally, a special word of thanks must go to Mr. Samir Sarkar the typist without whose miraculous ability to transform my scribbled manuscript sometimes beyond my own power to decipher into beautiful typescript it is doubtful if this work would have been completed.
