ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

‘Better late than never’—keeping this axiom in mind I am venturing to complete my dream project for which I have been striving for the last twenty years or, may be, more. The present discourse has been the result of many years of work. Collection of basic documents is of paramount importance and, because of the nature of secretive work undertaken by the revolutionary parties during the time of their activities, it becomes really difficult to collect those which were not preserved properly. Retrieving those documents took lot of time and, further, in spite of the best efforts, not all could have been retrieved, specifically the original copy of the minutes of the meetings held at the time under discussion.

This dissertation has been made possible on the basis of support, institutional as well as individual, over a long period of time. I got assistance and guidance from so many people that mentioning almost all the names are nearly impossible. In spite of this limitation, I would like to convey my deepest gratitude to all.

At the very beginning, I would like to state that in course of my work I met and talked with a number of national revolutionaries still living then. I would never forget the fond memories of my meeting with those great personalities who carried the spirit of uncompromising fight unto death. Most of them are no more but my interactions with them would always remain as a living source of inspiration for continuing my present work further.

I am immensely indebted to my supervisor, Sri Dyutish Chakrabarti, Associate Professor of Political Science, University of North Bengal who taught us Indian political movements in our post-graduate classes. This study could not have been possible without his help and encouragement. His motivation has helped me to choose this research topic of utmost relevance in the context of political movements in late colonial Bengal. It is a great privilege for me to work under his supervision and learn a lot of things by way of discussion with him. I owe you a lot, Sir!

I am no less indebted to Professor Dr. Ajit Kumar Ray (Retd.) of the Dept. of Commerce, University of North Bengal who since school days remains as my ideal character and whose vast knowledge in socio-politico-cultural aspects resolved all of my queries which I came across to complete this dissertation. In the course of this work when I have become frustrated on failing to get required information, it’s Prof Ray who continuously urges me not to lose hope and withstand the difficulties. I would remain ever grateful to him.

I would like to convey gratitude and indebtedness to my senior friends who have taken immense interest in the completion of my work and whenever I was in need, extended their best of cooperation by sending scanned materials or giving me reference books and always tried to keep my spirit high by talking to me either on phone or meeting me personally. I convey my heartiest thanks to you all: Sri Bhaskar Gupta, a veteran Marxist political activist & writer; Sri Ashoke Mukhopadhyay, editor-CESSTUS and a prolific writer; Sri Chandidas Bhattacharyya, a renowned social and political activist of West Bengal and Dr. Tarun Kanti Naskar, Professor, Dept. of Mechanical Engineering, Jadavpur University, West Bengal.

I am also immensely indebted to Sri Abhijit Roy, my childhood friend and, presently, a senior trade-union leader of Terai-Dooars Tea belt, for his sharp and analytical approach while raising pertinent questions and in the process of solving his queries and criticisms the work has greatly been enriched. I owe a lot to Abhijit!

My heartiest gratitude also to my friend, Dr. Shantanu De (MD): For giving me encouragement and mental support, all through the testing times; to Dr. Saswati Biswas, Professor of Sociology, University of North Bengal for showing keen interest in my work and extending all kinds of help as and when sought for.

I am conveying my gratitude, further, to Professor Soumitra De, Head of the Department of Political Science, North Bengal University and to Professor Sanjay Kumar Roy, Head of the Department of Sociology, North Bengal University for showing their keen interests in my research work and extending all possible help.

I am also grateful to some of my Facebook friends of Bangladesh who with their immense knowledge on the issues discussed in this dissertation stimulated and enriched my ideas by debates and discussions, breaking the barriers of the geographical boundary: Banglar Drishyapat, Ali Nayeem, Subrata Sarkar and Prof. Rajib Nandy.

I am also indebted to the Principal of my college, Dr. P K Mishra who showed immense interest in my work and provided all types of cooperation! I am grateful to you, Dr. Mishra.

I would also remain grateful to Dr. Saradindu Chakraborty, Former Principal of Alipurduar College and our ‘real’ guardian; Prof Nadita Mukherjee, Teacher-in-Charge, Parimal Mitra Smriti Mahavidyalaya, Malbazar, Jalpaiguri and our family friends, both of whom always urged me to carry this work to its logical culmination. I worked in both the institutions for a number of years and I would never forget the loving moments I shared with them.

I am also grateful to the following authorities for giving me access to these places as & when I needed: National Archives, New Delhi; Nehru Memorial Museum & Library, New Delhi, ICSSR Library, New Delhi; ICHR Library, New Delhi; National Library, Kolkata; West Bengal State Archives, Kolkata; CPI Library, Kolkata; North Bengal University Central Library; Surya Sen Mahavidyalaya Library; Parimal Mitra Smriti Mahavidyalaya Central Library and Alipurduar College Central Library. I am also greatly indebted to Dr. Dilip Chaudhuri, former Librarian, University of North Bengal for providing me some very rare reference books from his personal collection.

The University Grants Commission approved me a Minor Research Project (MRP) on a related theme and this financial assistance rendered much help in venturing various resources.

My thanks to two of my friends: Sri Saibal Guptia, Associate Professor of Political Science, Bidhannagar College and Dr. Tamash Ranjan Majumdar, Sr. Asst. Professor of Economics, University of North Bengal for giving me constant encouragement in the process of completion of this long overdue project.

I would also remain indebted to some of the junior colleagues of my college whose active cooperation and thought-provoking ideas helped me immensely: Dr Aniruddha Palit, Dept. of Mathematics; Sri Ranjit Kumar Barman, Dept. of Bengali and Sri Santanu Das, Librarian. I am personally indebted to Sri Parimal Roy, my ex-student and now Asst. Librarian of the Central Library, University of North Bengal, for extending utmost cooperation in various phases of the present work.

Finally, I would be failing in my duties if I forget to mention the names of my family members who always stood by me and provided technical and mental support: my daughters Dr. Oindrila Deb and Oishwaryya Deb, my son-in-law Dr. Arpan Mukhopadhyay and especially my wife Swati Banerjee (Associate Professor of Political Science). I would also remain indebted to one of our current family members, Subhajit Banerjee.

Last but not the least, I’m really grateful to my father, Late Sailendra Mohan Deb & mother, Late Surobala Deb who continuously inspired me for pursuing higher studies and my achievements used to brought immense pleasure and satisfaction in them. I feel very happy and fulfilled today as I have kept my promises given to them that I would never give up!
