Preface

Situated in the cause and consequence of society, theatre as a dynamic space heterogeneously synthesizes a multitude of voices, viz. of the playwrights, directors, choreographers, stage and costume designers, light/sound operators, and also that of the audience. It not only intervenes into the cultural, political, religious structures of society, but also, almost always, challenges its equilibrium. But, historically theatre has failed to provide adequate representation to women as conscious subjects and often engaged in producing stereotypes. Feminist theatres of the 1960s sought to foreground the representation of women in theatre but were criticized for being essentialist and failing to address the differences that separate women in one context from women in another. But Tutun Mukherjee's 'Prolegomenon to Women's Theatre' in her anthology of plays by women playwrights Staging Resistance: Plays by Women in Translations (OUP 2005), introduced me to the gradual growth of a theatre by women in India that thematically and dramaturgically deviates from the feminist as well as male-dominated traditional Indian theatre conventions. Forays into the Indian Women's Theatre led me to explore not only its uniqueness in engaging socio-cultural crevices with respect to women in India but also the variety of forms they espoused to articulate their voices. In this thesis, however, I primarily focus on exploring themes and issues Indian women playwrights have broached in their plays, making a select study of women-authored plays. Appearing at different points in time, the plays have been brought together here on the basis of their theme/s that foreground women as the subject resisting stereotypes and thus voicing their desire and articulating a life of their own.

In the course of this research, I have received extensive support from the National School of Drama repertoire. Various editions of Theatre India, National School of Drama’s Theatre Journal, have helped me structure and restructure my perspectives on the contributions of Indian women playwrights and directors. The Central Library of the University of North Bengal has provided me all the logistic and academic assistances that were necessary for the thesis to reach its desired end. Portions of/ related to this thesis have been presented in seminars/ conferences and published in the following seminar/ conference proceedings and peer-reviewed journals:

➢ "Images: Women in Post-Independence Male Oriented Indian Theatre". Postcolonial Indian Drama in English and English Translation: Reading Themes and Techniques. ed. by De, Uttiya and Sarkar, Jaydip. Authors Press. 2015.

I owe a debt of gratitude to the University of North Bengal for funding my research from 17/04/2013 to 08/06/2017, my tenure as the State/ University Research Fellow. My Supervisor, Professor Ashis Sengupta, whom I feel honoured to regard as my Academic Father, has been way more than a mentor to this thesis. His guidance has not only steered my growth as a scholar but also improved me as a person.

My sincere gratitude is to my teacher, Sri. Bhaskar Uday Ghose, who, opened up the world of academics to me. I feel indebted to Mrs. Mitra Sengupta, my beloved Kakima, for her constant encouragement throughout the course of my thesis and her promise to guide me beyond the realms of academics. I am grateful to my parents for their continuous support and upholding my work over everything, my sister, for pampering me with high sense of worth and my parents-in-law for taking pride in my work. I would also like to thank Tirna Sengupta, my academic sibling, whose growth has inspired me in more ways than one. Finally, I owe a lot to my wife, Priyanka Roy, who shared all my pains. And my little daughter, Portia, has certainly helped in her own special ways!

Place: Jalpaiguri
Date: 12/12/2019

PINAKI RANJAN DAS