It is my mother who has a decisive role in my joining the research program, selecting the topic and completing the task so far. She has been enshouldering a great responsibility till now for managing me not only as a mother but as an institution. Her contribution is beyond acknowledgement in words.

The University of North Bengal, situated at the foot of the Himalayas, is my centre not only of study but maturation too. I am indebted to all of its staffs. Yet I should extend my gratitude to Dr. T.K.Chatterjee, the Registrar and Dr. S.L. Dutta, the Development Officer, who had never deprived me of their favourable considerations in unfavourable situations.

The anonymous body of UGC also deserves my thanks for the sponsorship of my research which could not assume the present form otherwise. Fellowship during the tenure helped me to enjoy a life free from occupational haste and full of learning mobility.

For imparting courses on phenomenology during my undergraduate classes I am grateful to Dr. Sunil Kr. Sarkar of Raiganj University College. The affectionate and instructive guidance of my teachers of the Department of Philosophy of this University is unforgettable. Among them my special gratefulness must go to Dr. Pabitra Kr. Roy who taught us phenomenology and existentialism.

Among the dear research scholars (regular and external) of the Department I am especially thankful to Mr. Kajal R. Biswas, who has been working on 'Value-neutrality in social sciences' and Mr. Benulal Dhar, whose area of study is 'Values and phenomenology'. They forwarded their suggestions and criticisms, along with the relevant literature they collected themselves from various sources.

Much pleasure I feel in expressing gratitude to my supervisor, Dr. Goutam Biswas. He at the inception of my research helped me to formulate the inquiry, provided timely guidance and persuance, and finally spent his time for assessing my arguments.

I remember another short but stimulating meeting with Prof. Maurice Friedman, who came to our University from San Diego State University, U.S.A. His lecture on 'dialogue' is everlasting in my memory.

During the last several years I have resided in some rented houses, the owners of which deserve my thanks for their cordial and co-operative attitude toward my living. I should also extend my appraisal to many of my acquaintances and friends who furnished me with their supports and stances. They helped me to feel what I am to do.

Regarding the preparation of the thesis I should first acknowledge the efficiency of Mr. M. Chakraborty who typed the whole matter within a very short period. Mr. and Mrs. Deb were also much careful in doing Xerox of the entire type script. Cover-printing has been done by Lila Press and binding is done by M/S Priyadarsini.

Last but not least I mention about Munera and our sweet Teesta, who have been co-operating from their respective positions.
