

LIMITATIONS OF THE STUDY

The present study is not without limitations. Limitations arise in respect of collection and application of data, choice and application of proper methodology, selection of villages and households etc.

First of all, the collection of data suffers from a number of constraints which include language problem, unwillingness to disclose real informations on the part of the respondents, lack of accuracy of data etc. It may be mentioned that the census reports up to 1981 have been used for the study. Limitations are also there with regard to the proper application of the data thus collected.

Secondly, the present study also suffers from certain limitations regarding the selection and application of appropriate methodology for the study.

Finally, limitations are also there in respect of the selection and survey of the sample villages, households etc.
