

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Integrated Child Development Services (ICDS) Constitutes India's major strategy to fulfill the commitment of providing the nation's children the basic services for a better start in life and scope for full physical, Psychological and Social Development.

This research paper present a view of the effectiveness of the strategy employed in the field level implementation of the programme among the Hindus and Muslims in urban areas and to find out the actual pattern of utilization of benefits of the programme.

For conducting this study first and foremost, I am grateful to my venerated research guide Prof. R K Bhadra of Department of Sociology, North Bengal University for allowing me to complete this research work for a Ph.D. degree in the North Bengal University which has made a name for itself among the reputed Universities of West Bengal.

I am highly indebted to Prof. R K Bhadra, for his valuable guidance, continuous help, positive criticism and encouragement at every stage of the present work. Without his guidance, help and inspiration it would not have been possible for me to complete this thesis paper.

I express my sincere thanks to all the Hindu-Muslim mother respondents of North Kolkata and supervisors of the Anganwadi Centers, without whose help and patience this work could not have been completed.

At last but not the least, I express my heartiest love and gratefulness to my wife, son and gratitude to Swami Sanniruddhanandaji Maharaj of Ramakrishna Mission, BelurMath, Howrah, for their constant encouragement and giving me a moral support to complete the research work in proper time.
