

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to express here my deep indebtedness to my teacher and guide, Dr. M.K. Roy, Department of Commerce, North Bengal University, who inspired me to pursue the study and offered valuable counsel and supervision throughout the course of the work. I also express my gratitude to the P.R.O., Industrial Development Bank of India, Bombay, and P.K. Choudhury, Senior Faculty Member, Management Development Institute, for furnishing me with valuable articles. I also thank the staff of the Computer Centre, N.B.U. for rendering computational assistance during the initial stages of the study. I also thank Prof. A. Pal, Vihari Chandra Krishi Vishwavidyalaya, Coocbehar, for providing me facilities to use his computer system. This dissertation owes much to the typographical assistance ungrudgingly given by Arul Ray.

This is an appropriate occasion to acknowledge the help and inspiration provided to me by my departmental teachers and colleagues. My heartfelt gratitude goes to D. Bhattacharya who read the manuscript and gave valuable suggestions and also to A.K. Ray for advising me during processing of data. It is also difficult to put down in words the debt I owe to M. Parkar, U.B.K.G. Bank, who encouraged, inspired, listened, and contributed much while the thesis was being written.
