Economic diversification in Bhutan, role of foreign aid in this development process and impact of foreign trade on economic growth have been captured in this dissertation. At the end of this work, I am in a position to recollect some major contributions made by some benevolent personalities to complete this project.

I am indebted to my supervisors Dr. Karubaki Datta, Centre for Himalayan Studies, University of North Bengal and Professor Anil Bhuimali, Department of Economics, University of North Bengal, for tolerating constant strains through giving me suggestions, correction of scripts, discussions on various issues and so on. Their valuable time given to me resulted in completion of this dissertation. I would be always grateful to them.

I am highly indebted to Dr. Shanti Chhetry, the principal of P.D. Women's College, Jalpaiguri for his continuous encouragement and extended privileges to complete the thesis. I am highly thankful to Professor Bipul Malakar, Faculty of Economics, Jadavpur University, for imparting me consultancy on econometric models with cross-section data. I am grateful to Professor Manik Lal Adhikary, Department of Economics, Burdwan University, for his contribution to fit the models with time series data. I owe my thankfulness to Zangley Dukpa, the Ex. Vice Chancellor of the Royal University of Bhutan for his oral permission to continue this research work during his visit to NBU in 2005.

Professor S.R. Mondal, Professor R. Sahu and M. Choudhury, Centre for Himalayan Studies, University of North Bengal, constantly encouraged me and provided me with valuable information on Bhutan. I am grateful to them. I am indebted to Ajoy Misra, Centre for Himalayan Studies, University of North Bengal, who fetched for me a few highly essential documents to complete the thesis.

My special thanks goes to all my colleagues of P. D. Women's College, Jalpaiguri, who have always encouraged me to complete the research work. Dr. Sanatan Vawal deserves special attention due to his suggestions for improving the language for this dissertation. Dr. Shekhar Chatterjee, Dr. Md. Abdur Razzaque, Debabrata Basu and Md. Raffiqul Alam, the librarian of P.D. Women's College, always supported me with valuable suggestions and study materials. I am extremely grateful to Sudipta Dey who constantly supported me in dealing with statistical softwares.

At last, I owe my indebtedness to the Secretary, University Grants Commission of India, for the approval of a Minor Research Project with financial support on the same title. This has eased the process of data collection very much. I am thankful to the officials of NBU, who have managed every official procedure to complete this dissertation. I owe my indebtedness to all others who have assisted me to complete the thesis.
