

Acknowledgement

My greatest intellectual debt is to my supervisor Dr. Manjulika Ghosh, former Professor of Philosophy, University of North Bengal, under whose supervision this Ph.D. Dissertation is written. Dr. Ghosh, who had been my teacher also, helped me through the Husserlian texts and difficult terrains of Husserlian thoughts. She acquainted me with the subtle nuances of phenomenological expressions which appear to be so unlike the terms and concepts used in the analytical tradition.

Dr. Ghosh had been a constant source of philosophical ideas and kindled in me the desire of undertaking this project on Husserl's phenomenology. She had been always tolerant of my lapses and shortcomings. She helped me with her books and procured research articles on my topic from different sources.

I am thankful to my teachers in the Department of Philosophy for their help and encouragement in connection with my work. I especially remember, in admiration and gratitude, Dr. Pabitrakumar Roy, who taught us phenomenology in the post graduate classes, in his inimitable style. I also had the occasion to discuss some of my problems with him.

I acknowledge my debt to the members of my family for standing by me during my preoccupation with my work.

I put on record my deep sense of gratitude to Dr. Santosh Kumar Pal, Dept. of Philosophy, University of Burdwan, for making available to me photocopies of Husserl's Ideas II and III which have been indispensable for my work.

I have no adequate words to thank my friend, Dr. S.M. Rakibuz Zaman, Asstt. Professor of Philosophy, Darjeeling Govt. College for helping me in so many ways in executing the thesis.

My sincere thanks are also to Sri Sandip Paul, for arranging the materials in a presentable manner and also to Sri Dinesh Das for binding the thesis.

Nirankush Chakraborty
(Nirankush Chakraborty) 03/0