In various stages of my doctoral work I have taken help from a number of persons and organisations in numerous ways. I have received moral support and encouragement from my parents, other family members, relatives and friends, employer, and colleagues. I am grateful to them. I have visited and used the libraries and / or documentation facilities of National Institute of Health and Family Welfare, New Delhi; International Institute for Population Sciences, Mumbai; Population Foundation of India, New Delhi; V. V. Giri National Labour Institute, Noida; Kings College, Cambridge; and Università di Pavia, Italy. I am highly indebted to these institutions. I would like to take the opportunity to say that the methodological portion of this dissertation has been presented in an International Ph. D. Conference on Research in Economics: Aims and Methodologies at the Università di Pavia, Italy in September 2004. I am grateful to the organisers of the conference, participants and Prof. Enrica Chiappero-Martinetti, Vice-President of the Human Development and Capability Association for comments and suggestions. I would also like to take the opportunity to say that four research articles from this doctoral work have been published in the Artha Beekshan (Journal of Bengal Economic Association), Journal of Social Sciences, Journal of Human Ecology, and The Anthropologist. I am grateful to the anonymous referees for comments and suggestions. I am thankful to my supervisors for their constant advice for qualitative upliftment of my work and other valuable advice. I am indebted to the University Grants Commission, Eastern Regional Office, Kolkata for providing me fund to carry out such a research project successfully.
