

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I became a law teacher by default and this is an honest confession. Having said that, the present work has been undertaken to fulfil a commitment made to a personal acquaintance. Anyway, the job has been done, the path has been treaded, the mountain has been climbed, mission accomplished!

But this single obscure statement does not minimise the invaluable inputs of a large number of persons I came across during the various phases of my life to make the journey until now worth the while. To thank all of them in print would be like writing another thesis. So keeping in mind the paucity of space, I would like to express my deep sense of gratitude towards the people who are important, both latently and patently, and further inseparable from the successful completion of this work.

First and foremost, my Supervisor and Guide, Prof. (Dr.) Gangotri Chakraborty, former Head of the Department of Law, North Bengal University deserves a sack full of thanks for goading a slow performer like me to perform with the zeal and enthusiasm - her personal trait, which was required for the job at hand. She has been patient and very liberal in tolerating me as her scholar, which would have been hard to come given her earlier avatar of a feared and appreciated disciplinarian. She has been, not only to me but even to my classmates and also a whole generation of law students, an inspiration since the days spent in the classrooms of the Law College (as it was then) which was, incidentally, located in the NBU Arts Faculty Building (the centrally located and happening place of the University). The Teacher of Excellence Award she received in 2009 would vouch for that. Though I missed her useful guidance in midst my LL.M course and later entering the profession of teaching, it is absolutely fate that I would most probably be getting my Ph.D. degree under her tutelage. Here I would also like to mention that I take total responsibility of any error committed in the work, which might have occurred due to my unheeding madam's fruitful advice. I hope her invaluable suggestions and timely motivations has delivered the desired result and I am indebted to her for that. Thank you, Maam.

Another inspiration of my becoming a scholar, if I may say so, was Prof. (Dr.) Ali Mehdi, Department of Law, Benaras Hindu University, Varanasi, U.P. while undergoing my Post Graduate study in the Department of Law, North Bengal University. Initially he was the one to tell me, in the face, that the form of academic approach I was subscribing to while pursuing the LL.M course was not proper and cautioned me that it was different from that of LL.B. He did not react to my errant ways while I was writing my dissertation under his supervision and in those early days even took keen interest in the development of my academic future. During those days, I believed that he was barking under the wrong tree but looking at the hindsight, his judgement seems to be sound and I am enormously grateful to him for all that. Thank you, sir.

My other learned teachers in the University, Dr. N.R. Chakraborty (may his soul rest in peace), Prof. (Dr.) Bishnu Prasad Dwivedi, Dr. Ruby Mazumdar, Dr. Akhilesh Pandey and many others (whose names I shamefully fail to recall), are equally responsible for making me well grounded academically.

My colleagues, especially seniors like Dr. Ganeshji Tiwari and Dr. Kasi Katari Visheshwara Rao, in the Sikkim Government Law College, Gangtok, also deserves my humble gratitude. Their suggestions, comments and advices, both beneficial and adverse, have been fruitful in understanding the confusing dimensions of life, both personal and professional.

I feel lucky to have met Dr. Atul K. Tiwari and Dr. Rathin Banerjee during my sojourns to the North Bengal University. Their encouragements and sane suggestions in conducting my professional life were always welcoming.

I am also happy that in my journey as a law teacher I came across a lot of new generation teachers from various universities but the respect and understanding shared with my fraternity in the North Bengal University seems unmatched.

I have also benefitted from the interactions with the students, though minimal, in producing the quality of the work it is.

The librarians and their assistants are the faceless people whose contribution though acknowledged may not be fully quantified. Therefore, I would like to thank all those librarians from the National Law School of Indian University, Bangalore to Panjab University, Chandigarh and from Indian Law Institute, New Delhi to National University of Juridical Sciences, Kolkata. But my sincere thanks is reserved for Mrs. Prerna Moktan, Librarian, Sikkim Government Law College, Gangtok for her infrastructural contribution in the completion of my work. Amalda and Satidi from the Department of Law library, North Bengal University also deserve my gratefulness for their help and cooperation.

The acknowledgements due would be incomplete if I fail in thanking Shri Kalyan Pradhan, Administrator, Sikkim Government Law College, Gangtok for his logistical support without which this work would not have seen the light of day. I also owe my gratitude towards the Officials of Human Resource Development Department, my parent department, the Sikkim Pollution Control Board, the Transport Department (Motor Vehicles Division), the Tourism Department, the Urban Development Department, The D.I.G. (Range), Sikkim

Police, Gangtok, and the police personnel manning the border checkpoints at the Rangpo and Melli.

The roles played by my parents and my family, both immediate and extended, in my life is incomparable, acknowledging their role for making a positive impact in my life and thanking them would be denigrating.

My brother, Dr.Chewang Dorji Bhutia, Senior D.M.O. N.F. Railways, has contributed a lot in executing this assignment and he is entitled to a large share of the success in this endeavour, Thanks Bro.

Finally, I would like to thank Dr. Sujit Biswas and Shri Diganto Biswas, my junior colleagues and who are presently serving as Assistant Professors in the NBU Law Department, for giving me last minute informations and help in the event of my submitting the present work.
