I wish to express my deep sense of gratitude to Prof. P.C. Sarker, Department of Economics, North Bengal University, my teacher and research supervisor who has althrough been an unfailing source of inspiration and encouragement. In fact, his valuable guidance, keen interest and loving care enable me to complete this thesis.

I am grateful to Prof. N.S. Iyenger, Economic Analysis Unit, Indian Statistical Institute, Bangalore, for his valuable suggestions and encouragement. Grateful acknowledgement is made to my teachers, colleagues and friends for their unstinted help and co-operation.

I cannot acknowledge by name the many households, members of panchayats, officials of the block, sub-division and district level whose kind services provided the raw material analysed in the present work, but I wish to record my debt to them.

My thanks are due to Mr. M. Chakraborty who painstakingly typed out the present form of the thesis.

Finally, I would like to express my deep gratitude to my elder brother, Mr. Broja G. Kundu. His affections ever inspired me to achieve the goal.
